I N T R O D U C T I O N

Unfilled job openings are those job orders given by employers which at the time of the count (the last working day of each month) remain unfilled because of inability to find applicants who meet the job specifications; a shortage of applicants; or because working conditions, plant location, hours or wages offered make such openings hard-to-fill. In addition, some job orders may have been given to the Employment Service so close to the time of the count that there had not been sufficient opportunity to fill them.

The attached tables present in three-digit occupational detail the openings that remain unfilled in job banks*, in Massachusetts at the end of each month. These summaries highlight areas of persistent demand and should prove useful to CETA Planners, Vocational Education Authorities, and others involved in the development of training programs.

Please note that each three-digit occupational group has within it the range of occupations proceeding from the top skill in the group down the ladder to the entry occupation. For example, for the three-digit occupational group "Machinist and Related" there are included the highly skilled machine shop foreman, the all-around machinist, layout man, machinist, apprentice and instrument maker helper. (These occupations are only a sampling of the full range of occupations included in the three-digit level).

The occupational structure has added significance for vocational education and training programs as it also groups occupations according to some combination of knowledge required, purpose, industry, materials worked with, and product and/or service. This structure clusters occupations with like characteristics under a common heading and in skill ladder. For example, under "Metal Machining" are included 10 three-digit groups ranging from machinists and related to metal machining not elsewhere classified. Thus the grouping in two-and three-digit occupational detail provides planners with a technique for looking at a skill cluster, evaluating opportunities in a total field of work, rather than pinpointing a single occupation.

In the tables that follow totals are presented at a one-and two-digit level and summaries for selected three-digit groups.

Springfield (Western District)

 Must be at least 5 openings in any month during the year.

As shown above the number of total openings in Massachusetts area job banks increased substantially (+43 percent) over the January-July period, but then experienced a significant decrease (-68 percent) during the second half of 1976. Total job openings reached a low point for the year in December when 4,843 openings remained unfilled on the last working day of the month. The net January to December decline was 15 percent.

During the first 180 days of 1976 the number of openings on the Massachusetts Job Banks increased by 43 percent. The most notable increases occurred in Springfield (+72 percent) as seasonal farm vacancies, coupled with significant gains in professional, technical, and managerial category and in the structural work category (+190 percent) drove up the number of unfilled openings. In Worcester total unfilled openings registered an 88 percent increase over the January-July period, with gains of 112 percent in the professional, technical, and managerial category and 662 percent in the structural work category leading the way. The latter reflects the demand for 400 assemblers by a nearby manufacturing firm. Total openings in the Taunton area job bank nearly doubled over the first half of 1976 with major advances occurring in the service category (+219 percent), the bench work category (+72 percent) and in the miscellaneous work category, where job openings more then tripled.

During the second half of 1976 all Massachusetts area job banks reported declines in the total number of job openings with an overall drop of 40 percent. Springfield experienced the largest contraction (-59 percent) while moderate losses were shown in Taunton (-52 percent), Lawrence (-45 percent) and Worcester (-41 percent). The Boston-Metropolitan area job bank reported the smallest downturn - a loss of 21 percent. With the exception of some scattered categories most occupational groups contributed to the reduction in demand.

While the overall demand for workers declined over the January-December period, white-collar occupations experienced a smaller decrease in job openings than their blue-collar counterpart. Reflecting the structural shift in the Massachusetts economy, the number of openings for blue-collar occupations dropped by 20 percent while white-collar openings dropped by only 9 percent in 1976.
